

Veterans Day, 2009

Dear Grandpa,

As your son I am taking this time to sincerely thank you for serving this country in its time of need. You fought for me, my friends, and this whole country just so we could be free. I consider it a great honor to have you not only as my grandfather but my father. The service you did in Korea I might not know much about but I sure appreciate it because I know you fought for this country.

As only a freshman in high school I cannot say I know how you felt or what you saw but I can say that I appreciate every single bit of what you did for this country. This country is safe and a better place because of veterans just like you. One day I might join the service and hopefully serve my country just the way veterans have done for this country since it started. You are a brave man to go overseas and fight for everyone in this country and I think you should be recognized for your sacrifice. I think everyone should be grateful for people like you that are willing to put their life on the line. I know I am supremely grateful.

The last words I have to say are thank you for the things you have done.

Love,
Your son, Dylan
